

A HANDBOOK FOR NEW GHOSTS

How to Scare People

Four lessons, in order, by Bartholomew — who has haunted the same house for two hundred years.

Print it. Read it. Then go and practise.

LESSON ONE

The Terrible Moan.

Open your mouth. Make it round, not wide. Then let out the longest, saddest sound you have.

ooooOoo

not eep

DIFFICULTY

Practise where nobody can hear you. The landing is good.
Behind a door is better.

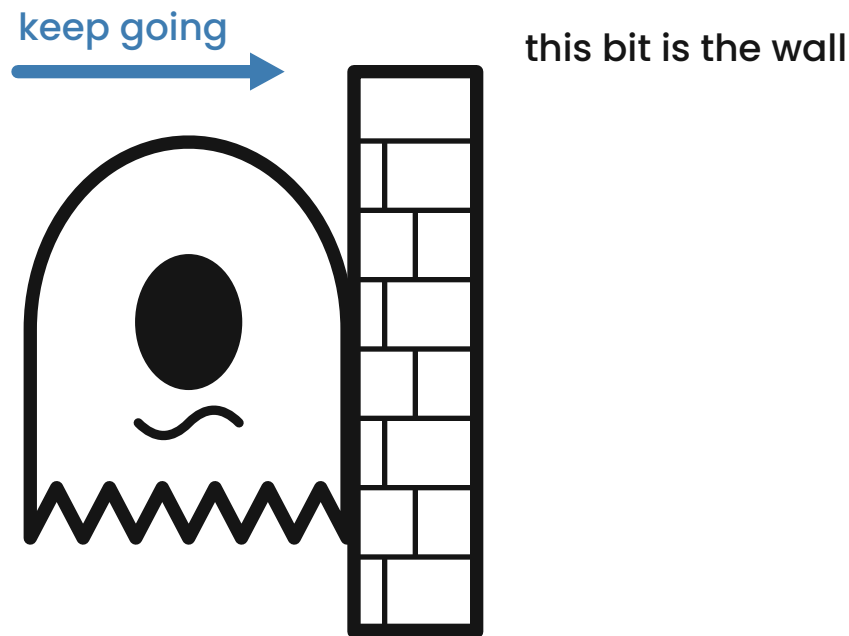

RESULT

The father said it was the pipes. It was not the pipes.

LESSON TWO

Passing Through Walls.

Walk at the wall as though it were not there. Do not slow down. Slowing down is how you get stuck.

DIFFICULTY

If you stop halfway you will be an elbow on one side and a ghost on the other. This is not frightening. It is just awkward.

RESULT

I got as far as my elbow. I stayed there until Thursday.

LESSON THREE

The Dreadful Cold.

Think of the coldest thing you know. Then think it harder, at the whole room, all at once.

DIFFICULTY

Warning. Some families enjoy this. Check for hats before you begin. If there are mittens in the house, choose a different lesson.

RESULT

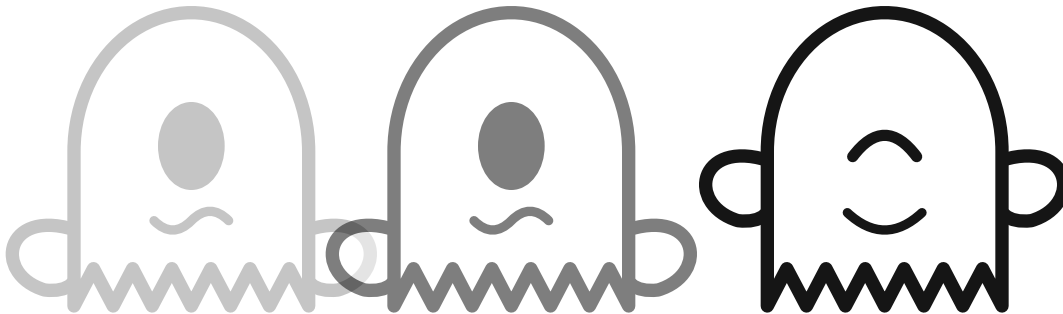

The smallest one shouted SNOW, INDOORS, and put her scarf on.

LESSON FOUR

Appearing Suddenly.

Be nowhere. Then be somewhere. There is no third step, which is why everyone thinks this one is easy.

ta-daa.

DIFFICULTY

The hard part is not appearing. The hard part is that people are allowed to be facing whichever way they like, and usually are.

RESULT

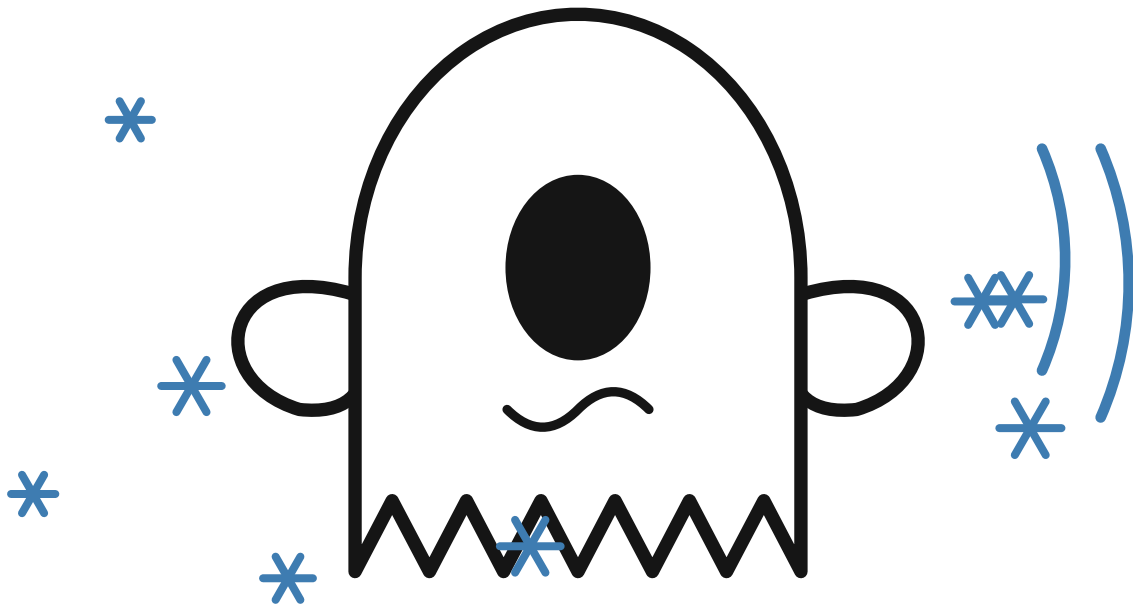

I appeared five times. They faced the other way five times. That is entirely their fault.

LESSON FIVE

All Four At Once.

This is the whole trick, and it took me two hundred years, so please read it slowly.

One at a time, each lesson is a small strange thing that a person can explain away. The moan is the pipes. The cold is a window. Together, at midnight, on the stairs, they cannot explain any of it.

the moan + the wall + the cold + all of a sudden

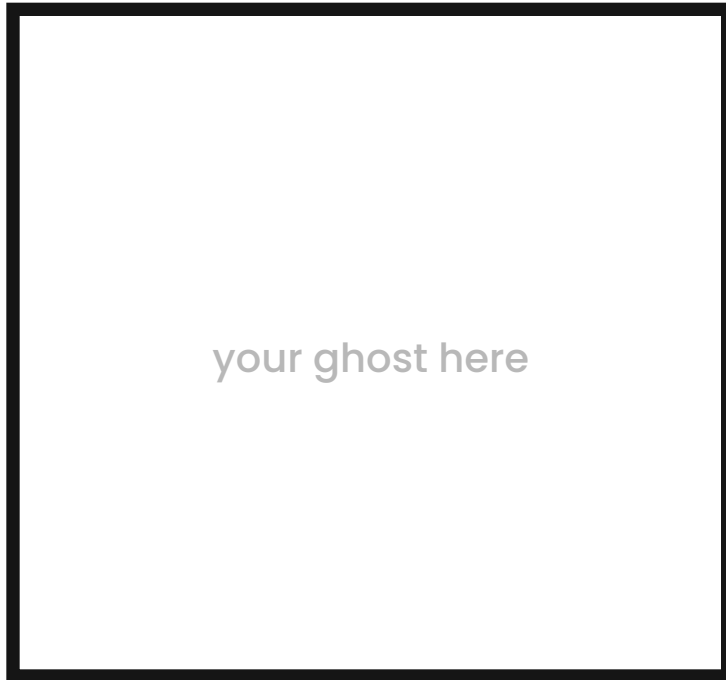

RESULT

They jumped so high. The father dropped the lamp. The smallest one said, do it again.

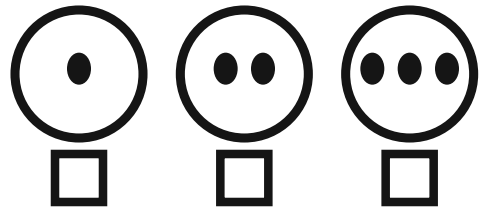

NOW YOU

Draw your own ghost.

Pick your parts. Then draw yours in the space.
